CHAMAREL COLOURED EARTHS

No one can categorically state why these undulating, dune-like knolls vary so wildly in colour. Some say the seven shades of earth were formed from volcanic ash deposits that cooled at different temperatures. Others believe that the colours of the mounds can be attributed to the differing quantity of metal oxide they each contain. However people choose to interpret them, the Coloured Earths at Chamarel – just west of the Black River Gorges – are worth investigating. A diver is positioned in the center of a dark underwater cave, looking towards the viewer. A large, bright trail of air bubbles rises from the diver, creating a strong light source that illuminates the scene. The cave walls are dark and textured, with some greenish-brown growth visible. The overall color palette is dominated by deep blues and greens, with the bright light from the bubbles creating a high-contrast effect.
